Nero, onis. m. [Sabinum vocab. quo fortem virum notat, quo Claudia gens in cognominibus usi sunt. Vid. Suet. Tib. 1. & Gell. 12. 21. quanquam Sabini deducere possent à νεῦρον, nervus] The name of divers emperors, whereof Nero Claudius Cæsar, adopted by Claudius, was the most infamous for cruelty, rapine, sacrilege, lust, extravagance, and to comprehend all crimes, ingratitude; he was the worst of them all, unless, one will match Caligula with him. He murdered his own mother, by whose means he got the empire; as also his brothers and relations, his wives Octavia and Poppæa, his master Seneca, and his minion Lucan the poet. He set Rome on fire, charged the Christians with the fact, and thereupon tortured and slew them publicly on stages for his pleasure in the daytime, and in pitched coats, called tunicæ molestæ, lighted up their bodies for torches in the night. At length his armies revolting chose Galba for their emperor; which he hearing, would fain have been dispatched out of the way: but none would do the wretch the favour to kill him; and as cowardice generally accompanieth cruelty, he had not the heart to help himself at a dead lift, but fled to a cave where he was found dead, but by what means he died is not known. Soon after hearing he had fallen in love with Iole, she sent him this garment, as he was sacrificing on mount Oeta. He put it on, and presently felt such violent pain by the force of the poisonous blood, that he burnt himself in the sacrificing fire. Vid. Stat. Theb. 11. 234. & deinc. Sen. Herc. Oet. 503.

* Nestor, oris. m. [Νέστωρ, Gr.] The son of Neleus king of Pylos, brought up to arms from his childhood. When he was young, he was one of those who fought with the Centaurs at the wedding of Pirithous; when old, he went with fifty ships to the Trojan war. His wisdom was such, that Agamemnon said, if he had but ten such counsellors, he should soon take Troy; and his eloquence so great, that his words dropped from his lips like honey. He is said to have lived three ages; whence Horace, Od. 2. 9. 13. giveth him the epithet of ter ævo functus, and Nævius that of trisæclisenex, ap. Gell 11. 7. Sed Homeri scholiastes, Acron, & alii non pauci, seculum definiunt 30 annorum, quod si sit, nonagenarium Nestorium tantùm esse necesse fuerit. Hinc

Orpheus, i. & eos. m. [Ὀρφεύς, Gr.] A Thracian, the son of Oeagrus; or, as others, of Apollo and Calliope; a most ancient, learned, and excellent poet. He was one in the Argonautic expedition, whereof he wrote his history; which together with his hymns, &c. is still extant, but whether genuine is much doubted. They are, without doubt, of good antiquity, but seem to be written by several persons, and at different times. The poets feign the woods and hills to follow him, as charmed by his lute, and rivers to stop their course, that they might hear his music; the meaning whereof is, that by his wisdom and eloquence he reduced the barbarous people to civility, as explained by Horace, A. Poët. 391. There are several others of this name found in Suidas; but Cicero, out of Aristotle, saith there never was such a man as Orpheus, and that the Orphicum carmen was made by a Pythagorean, one Cicrops, N. D. 1. 38. The sad story of his wife Eurydice's death, and his descent into hell, see pleasantly sung by the divine Maro, in the latter part of the last Georgic.

Ŏvidius, i. m. surnamed Naso, a Roman of the Equestrian order, an excellent poet, whose easiness in writing is every where visible, as well as his art in disposing; especially in his great work, where he connecteth times, persons, and things widely different so smoothly, ut per læve severos Effundat junctura ungues: nor is his vast reading less wonderful. Having some way disobliged Augustus, who before was his friend, he was banished to Pontus at fifty years of age, where he died after eight years and some months, and was buried at Tomos.

* Pan, Pānis, m. The god of ſhepherds, hunters, and all other country exerciſes. Mythologiſts thought the univerſal na ure of things to be ſignified by him. as his name ſeemeth to impo t. Whoſe ſon he was, is not agreed among them. Homer maketh him the ſon of Mercury, and ſaith he was called Pan from Πᾶν, omne, becauſe he charmed all the gods with his flute: others ſay, that he was the ſon of Demogorgon, and firſt invented the organ, of ſeven unequal reeds joined together, the manner thus: Having on a time fought with Cupid, that god in ſpite made him fall in love with the coy nymph Syrinx, who fleeing from him to the banks of Ladon, a river of Arcadia, at the inſtant praye s of the nymphs was turned into a reed, as her name in Greek ſignifieth, which the god graſping inſtead of her, made a pipe of it, and for his muſic was adored by the Arcadians. The moſt common opinion was, that he was the ſon of Mercury and Penelope. But Nat. Comes, out of Duris Samius, maketh his birth ſcandalous, ſaying he was called πᾶν, becauſe begot by all Penelope's ſuitors. He was painted half man, half goat, having large goats horns, a chaplet of pine on his red face, a pleaſant laughter, with the feet and tail of a goat, a motley ſkin covering his body, with a crooked ſtick in one hand, and his pipe in the other; ſee him nicely deſcribed by Sil. Ital. 13. 326. & ſeqq. a ſight enough to fright women and children, yea, armed men too. For when Brennus the Gaul was about to pillage the temple of Apollo at Delphos, he by night ſtruck ſuch a terror into his army, that he quitted his ſacrilegious deſign; hence Panici terrores. Yet, as homely as he was, he pleaſed the goddeſs Luna, turning himſelf eaſily into a white ram, Virg. Georg. 3. 392. & deinceps; and the nymph Dryope alſo, almoſt putting off his divinity, and turning ſhepherd for her ſake. Neither was he diſpleaſing to other nymphs, who are generally made dancing round about him, to hear the charms of his pipe. The uſual offerings made him were milk and honey, in ſhepherds wooden bowls; alſo they ſacrificed to him a dog, the wolf's enemy, whence his uſual epithet is λυκαῖος, and whence alſo his prieſts were called Luperci. His feſtival was celebrated Feb. 15th by the Romans, brought into Italy by Evander the Arcadian, and revived afterwards by Romulus, in memory of his preſerver. He was alſo cal ed by the Romans Junus, ab ineundo. Vid. Liv. 1. 5. Macrob. Sat. 1. 22. & Serv. in Virg. Æn. 6. 775. The ancients, by giving ſo many adjuncts and attributes to this idol, as before hinted, ſeem to have deſigned him for the ſymbol of the univerſe; his upper parts being human, becauſe the upper part of the world is fa r, beautiful, and ſmiling, like his face; his horns ſymbolize the rays of the ſun, and of the moon; his red face the ſplendor of the ſky; the ſpotted ſkin, wherewith he is clothed, the ſtars, which beſpangle the firmament; the roughneſs of his lower parts, beaſts and vegetables; his goats feet, the ſolidity of the earth; his pipe, compact of ſeven reeds, the ſeven planets, which they ſay make the harmony o the ſpher s; h s crook, bending round at the top, the years circling in one another. Serv. interpr.

Pompōnius, i. m. The name of several Romans. (1) Titus Pomponius, who finding the commonwealth harrassed by the faction of Cinna, retired to Athens, where he improved himself in his studies, and learned the Greek tongue so perfectly, that he gained the name of Atticus. He was a man of singular courtesy and humanity, yet grave withal; a true friend to his friends, whom he assisted and relieved in their adversity without respect to any party, for he was very rich. He was very frugal, but very generous, very elegant and nice in his house and equipage, but not expensive. He was free from pride, affectation, and ambition; equally beloved by Octavius and Brutus. Hortensius and Cicero were very intimate with him; the latter of which wrote 16 books of epistles to him. He died of a fistula, or rather of a voluntary abstinence, in the 77th year of his age. (3) Cneius Pomponius, a good orator, very acute and vehement. (3) Jul. Pomponius Secundus, a noble citizen, and good poet. * Proserpĭna, æ. f. [omnino à Gr. Περσεφόνη] The daughter of Jupiter and Ceres, stolen by Pluto out of Sicily, and carried to his subterranean dominions. Her mother missing her, lighted those fires which have burnt ever since on the top of Ætna, sought her through the island, and afterwards throughout the world, but in vain. At length hearing where she was, she petitioned Jupiter for her return, at least six months in the year. Pluto assented, provided she had tasted nothing there. But one Ascalapus saying that he had seen her taste some grains of a pomegranate, her return was intercepted. Vid. Cic. in Verr. 4. 48. Serv. in Virg. Georg. 1. 49. lege & Ov. Met.* 12. 68. & Catull. 66. 74.

* Proteus, eos. m. [Πρωτεὺς, Gr.] The son of Neptune and Phœnice, or of Oceanus and Tethys, one of the gods of the sea, foretelling future events. He could transform himself into any shape. According to Homer, he was an Ægyptian. Diodorus Siculus saith he was a king of Ægypt, and that after the manner of their kings, he sometimes used a lion, sometimes a bull, for his crest. Plato and Lucian agree that he was an Ægyptian, but the former maketh him a sophist, the latter a stage player; each of them endeavouring to assign the moral of his fabulous mutability. Virgil dissenteth from them all, with regard to his country, which he saith was Pallene, a peninsula of Macedon; and that his chariot was drawn by sea horses. Lege Virg. D.* 3. rectiùs, puto, à סתור absconditus, quòd in Italiâ lateret, unde & Italia Latium à latendo, vel à Satorn, Celt. fortis] The son of Cœlus and Terra, or Vesta, whom some call his daughter; or, as Plato, of Oceanus and Tethys. He married Ops, or Rhea, his own sister. His elder brother Titan was prevailed upon to assign over his right to him, which he did on this condition, that Saturn should destroy all his male children, that so the kingdom might return to Titan's posterity; which Saturn performed, devouring the males as soon as born. But when Jupiter and Juno were born, Ops gave him a stone wrapt up like a child to devour, which he did; and by some such device saved Neptune, and Pluto also. Titan hearing of this, made war upon his brother, subdued him, and threw him into Tartarus; whence he was delivered by his son Jupiter. But, notwithstanding, having learned by the oracle that his son should dethrone him, he laid wait to kill him. But Jupiter, having notice of it, was beforehand with him, surprised him, made him drunk, bound, and gelded him, as he with his sithe had served his father Cœlus, vid. Apoll. Arg. 974. Being looled, he fled, and hid himself in Italy: which from thence was called Latium, à latendo, and the people Latines. Virg. Æn. 8. 319. Jane who reigned at that time, entertained him kindly, and gave him a part of his kingdom; where he built a city called Saturnia, quòd vid. n. 2. In his reign the poets fix the golden age, when the earth without culture brought forth every thing. Vid. Ov. Met. 1. fab. 3. He first taught the rude people to plough and sow, and gave to the sithe, which some make a symbol of husbandry, others take to be his attribute as the god of time.

* Sīren, is. sed sæp. plur. Sīrēnes [à σειρά, catena, quòd quasi vinctos homines tenerent] Poetical monsters, partly virgins, partly fowls. They lived on the coast of Sicily, and by the sweetness of their voice in singing tempted passengers to shore to their destruction. Some make them three, others only two. The fable is variously moralized. Plato taketh them for the goddesses of harmony, who tune the spheres; Pausanias for the goddesses of eloquence in all kinds. Hence Isocrates in his epitaph was called Siren, and Valerius Cato Latina Siren. Others, and with greater show of reason, make pleasures the moral, pretending to account for their number, how they are three, from hence, because they comprehend all pleasures in eating, drinking, and venery, Plato et Aristot. but these exclude the highest pleasures, those of the mind; nor doth their account take in even animal pleasures. * Sōcrătes, is. m. [Σωκράτης, Gr.] (1) The son of Sophroniscus, a stone-cutter of mean fortune, and Panarete a midwife; an Athenian philosopher, the wisest man living in his time, in the judgment of the oracle of Apollo. Quintilian calleth him, the fountain, as Tully, before him, the prince of philosophers. He was master to Xenophon and Plato, from whom we have an account of him; for he left nothing in writing. He taught his scholars gratis. He was chiefly studious in Ethics, the most useful branch of philosophy. In his advanced age he was ridiculed by Aristophanes, accused by Anytus, a rich man, Melites, a poet, and Lycon, an orator, of contemning the gods, and endeavouring to introduce a new religion, because he said he had a genius, with whom he advised in all his affairs. Whereupon he was condemned to die, and with a serene countenance drank up his cold poison, giving precepts of virtue during all the time of its operation. But after his death the Athenians showed their repentance, by putting to death his accusers; so true is that of the poet, Virtutem incolumem odimus, Sublatam ex oculis quærimus invidi. (2) A painter who drew the Graces at Athens; also Ornus twisting his rope, and the ass standing by to devour it. (3) ‖ An historian of Rhodes. (4) ‖ An historian of Constantinople, who wrote the history of the church in Greek, from the time of Constantine to that of Arcadius. (1) Vid. Xenoph. in Oecon. He was very learned, eloquent, politic, ambitious, and valiant; and withal so successful, that Sallust doubteth whether his valour or fortune were superior, whereby he gained the surname of Felix. He conquered Jugurtha king of Numidia, and put him in chains. He subdued the Cimbrians and Teutones, destroying great numbers of them. In his consulate, having Asia for his province, he defeated Mithridates at Orchomenos and Cheronæa, and his lieutenant Archilaüs at Athens, possessing himself of the city and fort Piræeum. When afterwards his army was given to Marius, he returned into Italy, and defeated the son of Marius, who was slain at Præneste, Paterc. 2. 26. He was a very cruel man, and first set up public tables of proscription, or outlawry, putting some thousands of Romans to death, though laying down their arms, and desiring quarter, and so filled Rome with blood. At length laying down his dictatorship, he fell into general contempt, and retiring to Puteoli, died of the lousy disease. Vid. Cic. in Verr. Val. Max. 2. 8. Plut. Eutrop. alios.

And to confirm himself in the government, he added 100 senators to those formerly made by Romulus, judging that would strengthen his party. He gained many victories over the Latins and Sabines. At length, after a reign of 38 years, he was surprised and slain by the contrivance of the sons of Ancus, Liv. lib. 1. (2) Tarquinius, from his behaviour called Superbus, the seventh and last king of Rome. He married Tullia the daughter of Servius Tullus, a woman of as haughty a spirit as himself; at whose instigation he slew his father-in-law, and usurped his kingdom. But his son Sextus Tarquinius having ravished Lucretia, a chaste Roman matron, who thereupon had killed herself, her father and husband so possessed the people with the indignity and horror of the fact, that they expelled the family out of the city, and changed the form of their government from regal to consular, vid. Liv. 1. sub fin. Ovid thus describeth him, Ultima Tarquinius Romanæ gentis habebat Regna, vir injustus, fortis ad arma tamen, Fast. 2. 687.

Trajānus. i. m. The fourteenth emperor of Rome, a Spaniard by birth; a man deservedly commended for his civil and military virtues. The senate gave him the eulogy of OPTIMUS PRINCEPS, as his coins, which are very obvious, still witness. So mild was he in his administration, that only one senator suffered during his reign of 19 years and 6 months. The third persecution of the Christians indeed was raised in his time, but this was occasioned by the misrepresentation of their enemies. For being rightly informed of their behaviour by the younger Pliny, he immediately put a stop to it. He died in the 9th month of the 62d year of his age, and was the only person buried in the city. His ashes were deposited in a golden urn, under a pillar of 144 feet. He left so great an opinion of his goodness, that no better wish could be made in their acclamations by the senate to any succeeding emperor, than that he might be more fortunate than Augustus, more excellent than Trajan. Lege vit. ab Eutrop. script.

* Xerxes, is. m. [Ξέρξης, Gr.] A king of Persia, the son of Darius. He was a very haughty prince, but very weak and unsuccessful. The war with the Athenians begun by his father, he prosecuted, invading Greece with 700,000 men of his own kingdoms, and 300,000 auxiliaries, and 12,000 ships. But this so great and powerful an army wanted a commander; for the king, who should have led them on, was always last in the field, and first in the flight. He was first opposed at Thermopylæ; Leonidas king of Sparta, with 4000 men, endeavouring to hinder his landing, which they did for several days, cutting off vast numbers of their enemies, but at length, wearied with slaughter, they all fell. Upon which he marched to the city, burnt it, and several others which were empty of inhabitants. Themistocles having overcome him in a sea fight, from which he fled in a fisherman's boat, afterwards perfected the liberty of Greece more by policy, than his arms, Vid. Just. 3. 12. & seq. Prætor, m. (1) The consuls being employed abroad in war, an officer called prætor urbanus was constituded with power to judge matters of law between citizen and citizen; and by Cicero often prætor Romanus, like our lord-mayor; and because there was a great company of strangers at Rome, another like our sheriff of Middlesex was appointed to judge causes between them, and called peregrinus. (2) At last, more provinces came in, and causes increasing, eight other prætors were created, and so continued till Julius Cæsar made them ten. (3) At last it came to signify any governour, or chief magistrate. (1) Vid. Onufrium Comment. in lib. 1. Fastorum ad A. U. 388. & Lips. in 1 lib. Annal Taciti.
